On the ocean side of Daytona is Seabreeze, with another Congregational church, founded with missionary money but now self-supporting. An inviting road runs south from Daytona, and with the scent of the salt water in his nostrils the autoist Smyrna, where Congregationalism is centered in a community church. Now turn west and follow a smooth country road for twenty-one miles to Lake Winnemissett, then south three miles to Lake Helen, where in a fine citrus country we have a church which still leans slightly upon the Home Missionary Society. Back again to the lake and on west four miles and the tourist comes to Deland, the seat of Stetson University. Here the road turns south again, and after swinging along five miles over its smooth surface we strike another church of ours at Orange City. The trail leads south across the St. Johns River into Sanford. Here are good Congregationalists, worshipping in our stone church and carrying on truck farms in the heart of the Florida trucking district. Another twenty miles south over an excellent brick road is the gem city of Florida, Winter Park, the home of Rollins College, with nearly three hundred students, and a Congregational church, probably the most vigorous in Florida. The car is now on the Dixie Highway from Jacksonville to Tampa, good practically all the way. Run down a few miles toward Orlando, where we once had a Congregational church, turn west and follow the speeds...
