Excerpt: .such as to relieve the master from liability for the injury of one servant through the negligence of another; and proceeds and sustains the New York rule. In the case of Weeks 1/. Scharer, 111 Fed. 330, 49 C. C. A. 372, from the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Eighth Circuit, is a late decision prepared by Circuit judge Sanborn. It is a very instructive and exhaustive opinion, containing the citations of many authorities. It is there stated: An employee frequently acts in a dual capacity--at times a fellow-servant, at times a vice-principal--and the line of demarcation between the negligence of one whose risk the servant assumes and that for which the master is liable is this, to wit: If the act is done in the discharge of a positive duty of the master, then the negligence therein is the negligence of the...
