Not illustrated. 1918 Excerpt: . linoleum are products from linseed oil based on this property. We object to a covering of our intestines with a varnish, therefore linoleum is out of the question. The glyceride of ricinoleic acid is the only vegetable oil which is fit for medical use. It has the advantage of containing, in its fatty acids, the 18 carbon atoms preferable to animal metabolism. It is understood that in such condition of monopoly of castor oil in the vegetable and animal kingdoms, the question of mineral substitution came up. To a certain extent, mineral oils were tried, were found to be feces softeners and were claimed by enthusiastic men or by interested trade superior to castor oil. (To be Continued.) Propaedeutics of the Pharmakotherapeutical Chemistry. FELIX VON OEFELE, M.D., New York. For thousands of years, the entire natural history, and particularly medicine, were based on the philosophical and therapeutical consideration of scholastic speculations. Different medical sects separated continuously during the history of medicine; there were three principal divisions. The first group considered the general universum in an astrological sense as a basis and was called the iatromathematical idea, where astronomy was valued as the highest degree of mathesis. The second put mechanical considerations in front and was called iatrophysical conception. The third was based on the chemical reactions, supposed to be within the circulating liquids, and was called the iatrochemistry. At this time chemistry had not yet started to become a science similar to modern chemistry. An...
