Not illustrated. 1839 Excerpt: .especially, because a great deal has been founded upon it by the supporters of Dr Cook s motion, as obliging Presbyteries to receive and admit qualified presentees. I shall speak, Sir, to the nature and extent of that obligation immediately. In the meantime, I would call the attention of the House fo the fact, that this statute distinctly recognises the exclusive power to give collation as vested in the Presbyteries, as well as the power to decide all matters and causes ecclesiastical, within their bounds, according to the discipline of the Church. How it is possible for any man to maintain in the face of these express provisions, that the Court of Session has jurisdiction in matters properly ecclesiastical, and particularly in the ordination or collation of ministers, does, I acknowledge, surpass my comprehension. On these grounds, Sir, I submit it to be perfectly clear, --first,...
